The website has theories as to the cause of the events introduced in the podcast. The website also has a gallery to help viewers visualize the events and key figures of the time. The podcast is within the website.	https://apushsalemwitchtrials.weebly.com/	We made a game called "Who Am I? Salem Witch Trials Edition". The game board's background is a hand-drawn map of Salem village and town, and shows the accusers, defenders, and witches based on where they lived in Salem in 1692. It includes ten important figures from Salem as characters. The player gets ten cards that include descriptions of each character ending with a "Who Am I?" question. The player must match the right description to the right character and put the description card in the right envelope attached to each character. It is a fun and interactive way to learn more about the people involved in the witch trials and provides a clearer understanding of each person's role in it.

We gave you a flashdrive so you could directly transfer the file, as the uploading did not work	Will attach later today	We made a large syringe, one of the key features one thinks of when one says "medicine", and also the main device used to inject the plutonium and other elements of this experiment. Inside the syringe, we wrote the lies that were told to the patients, as none of them were told about this experiment. Coming out of the experiment in droplets is what really occurred to the patients.
